Here's Hope

It's All in a Nut

There's a lot of hope in an acorn. Within that little seed are the massive beams of a hardwood. Within that small nut are roots that sink deep and grasp for the foundation of the miraculous tree; something big, something good, something powerful - all from something small, insignificant, so common.

It all starts with a nut, buried by the wind or a thoughtless squirrel. It may be forgotten by all, but the miracle of life somehow takes over. And with days, weeks, months and years the mighty oak takes over. So small, to so big, it's a miracle. Who could've predicted, who really expected? Really? Really?

If God can do all that with a nut, what do you think He might do with other small things? Like, for instance, what might God do with your talents, if you surrender them to Him. What might God do with your mind, if you devote it to His service? And, what about your time?

I'll tell what God can do. He can take a nobody, almost ready to perish, like Moses and raise up the savior of a race, the Jews. He can take the loaves and fishes of a name-less young boy and feed the five thousand. He can take the pen of the apostle Paul, sequestered in some nowhere of a prison, and write the letters that become the New Testament and change the world. That's what God can do. Can He do that in your life? Can He do that with your talents? Can He do that now? I mean we know He could do it two thousand years ago... but what about now?

Has God changed?
